Program Details

The American Medical Association (AMA) represents American medical doctors and certain allied health professionals. The AMA promotes professionalism in medicine and seeks standards for medical, education, practice, and ethics. NOTE: Individuals are advised to refer to the AMA Web site for physician information. If more extensive information than that provided on the Web site is required, phone AMA with the specific request (there is a fee for this service, depending on the amount of research required.) Referrals to state medical boards can also be provided. Patients may access information on specific doctors, or search databases for physicians by specialty and geographic location on their website at <https://apps.ama-assn.org/doctorfinder/recaptcha.jsp>. Information provided includes: - Contact information - Medical school and residency training - Specialties, major professional activity Though physician names and contact information are provided for virtually every medical and osteopathic doctor in the United States, details about physicians who are not AMA members may be limited. The AMA Web site also includes health information on a number of topics, including disease states, therapies and health strategies. Coding products for professionals may be ordered online via <https://www.amazon.com/stores/page/112D63A3-2DF2-490B-A8CA-79D03F0F0E99>.
